English Teacher's Column

I would like to teach you how to create a new story using the 6WH skill. The 6WH means 'who, where, what, when, why and how'. As a writer, I think creating the character is the first task. Look at the things around you! A pen can become spiritual, and a computer mouse can be activated and moved around. If you find it difficult to create a character, take a piece of black paper. Then, cut up a circle, a square, a rectangle or an oval. Put these shapes aside. Look at the negative side of the black paper. What can you see? A rabbit? A robot? A dog? One of the shapes or the combination of the shapes can become the main character of your story.
