🌉 樂善堂劉德學校 二零一七年七月份簡訊

e-learning (Part 1)

The Primary Four class are undergoing a series of e-learning lessons using different Apps and e-platform. In this month, they have accomplished two great things.

The first one is a collage of more than 200 words on a page. Whenever a student spell his favourite known word, the screen will show up the word and has it arranged artistically. In fact, this class has a big range in learner diversity. There are students who can read the book Henry Potter at ease. Simultaneously, there are students who come from Mainland China, knowing simple sentences on self introduction only. The spelling game stimulates my students to get interests in English learning.

The second e-learning tool is Nearpod. There are more than 30 quizzes prepared on the e-platform for self directed learning. On the one hand, students can self assess their understanding at their own pace. On the other hand, students can compete with others for the highest mark. This is a good challenge driving some students to work harder in the coming assessments.

Anyway, there are other interesting activities like polling, note writing and card games. Let me introduce them to you next time.

e-learning (Part 2)

Learning to read is an essential part of life skill. Many people believe that it is to be taught and learnt at school. It is true to say that, maybe on reading skills and strategies. How about promoting reading as a habit for leisure time? How about the building up as one's interest? I doubt.

More and more people prefer to spend their time on TV or portable games which bring both visual and audio stimulation to their eyes and brains. Worse still, advanced technology allows players to have online communication which adds more varieties and excitement to video game players.

While the booming of technology is taking control of and killing people's time and energy on the moving images, books are vanishing and knowledge has switched to chatting language and emoji symbols. Libraries become 'chat rooms'!

Viewing this set back in reading habits, our school blends the ideas of games and knowledge together.

Starting from April, students join an online English game programme which includes phonics, sight words and calculation. We intend to promote our students with the pleasure of reading as well as to occupy their idle time.

It is hope that students can silent read in their heads. Simultaneously, they can read loudly and confidently in front of the class. Most importantly, we hope these reading skills will help our students to go along with their acquired knowledge and gradually students will crouch in the library, holding not only i Pads but hard covered books.

Writing tips: Writer's intention (目的)

A writer is trying to portray to the audience the purpose of the writing. In this article, the writer finds that 'portable games' has taken the place of books. This is the problem. As a result, to promote reading, playing games and learning English are blended. This is the solution. Yet, the writer has great expectation that students will be holding their books again. This is the writer's intention.
